ABSTRACT

DAVID E. POPE
The first annual meeting in New Orleans...

The idea of holding the annual meeting in New Orleans, as proposed by the Gulf Coast Association of Geological Societies, was developed and discussed at a meeting held on March 24, 1960, at the following:

The proposed meeting was held in New Orleans on February 24, 1961...
The OCAGS now consists of twelve members. This is very encouraging, knowing how high those goals are. This is very encouraging.

In the 1983 edition, the Executive Committee was expanded to include a new position of Executive Director. This position was filled by Dr. William F. Haldeman. The OCAGS would consider any existing in such positions.

The OCAGS also has been added to the Executive Committee. The Executive Committee consists of twelve members. The OCAGS also has been added to the Executive Committee.

The number of annual meetings that are considered is significant. Annual meetings, such as those held by the American Historical Association, are crucial for the exchange of ideas and the advancement of knowledge in the field. However, the number of meetings can be overwhelming for attendees, who often have to choose between attending different sessions. This can be especially true for graduate students and early-career scholars who are just beginning their careers in academia.

The number of meetings also impacts the overall costs associated with attending conferences. Travel expenses, registration fees, and lodging costs can add up quickly, making it difficult for attendees to justify the financial commitment. In some cases, institutions may provide travel grants or other forms of support to help cover these costs, but for many, this is not an option.

Another factor to consider is the impact of too many meetings on the quality of the discussions that take place. With so many different sessions happening simultaneously, it can be challenging for attendees to find the time and energy to fully engage with the content being presented. This can result in a decrease in the overall quality of the research being discussed and the opportunities for meaningful collaboration.

In conclusion, while the number of annual meetings is important, it is crucial to balance this with the need for quality and engagement. Institutions and organizations should consider the number of meetings they host and the impact this has on attendees, and work to ensure that the meetings are well-organized and impactful.
The primary publication of the IGCS is the Transactions published by the IGCS, which is an annual publication that contains the proceedings of the annual conference. This publication includes papers presented at the conference along with abstracts, keynote speeches, and other related content. The Transactions are distributed to members of the IGCS and are also available to the public through various publication channels. The Transactions serve as a platform for dissemination of research and ideas within the field of computer graphics and related areas.

The Transactions are published in both print and electronic formats, and they are organized into sections that cover different topics and aspects of computer graphics. The Transactions are also available online, allowing for easy access to the latest research and developments in the field.

The Transactions are a valuable resource for researchers, practitioners, and students in the field of computer graphics, providing them with a comprehensive overview of the latest research and trends in the field. The Transactions are an important tool for promoting the advancement of knowledge and the development of new technologies and applications in the field of computer graphics.
The constitution and by-laws of the association were published in 1981, and the first student committee was established in 1982. The constitution was amended in 1983 and the by-laws in 1984. The association was incorporated as a non-profit organization in 1985.

The executive committee is composed of the president, the vice-president, the secretary, the treasurer, and four other members elected by the members of the association. The executive committee meets at least once a year, and the annual meeting is held in October of each year.

CONCLUSIONS

The answer to the question of whether CGS "should be carried forward by the next generation" (p. 36) is not straightforward. While CGS has been successful in its early years, it faces significant challenges in the future. These challenges include maintaining its membership and funding, addressing the needs of its members, and adapting to changes in the field of geology. The conclusion is that CGS should continue forward, but it must be prepared to make changes and adjustments as needed.

FINANCES

The financial status of the CGS is a matter of concern. The organization has been experiencing financial difficulties, and there is a need for a more proactive approach to fundraising and budgeting. The CGS must work to increase its membership and revenue in order to ensure its financial sustainability.

ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

The authors would like to acknowledge the contributions of the members of the CGS, as well as the support of various organizations and individuals who have helped to make the CGS the success it is today. The success of the CGS is due in large part to the dedication and hard work of its members, and the organization owes a debt of gratitude to them.
